Angie Phillips Recognized as a Corporate Woman of Achievement by the National Association of Women Business Owners

CHICAGO, IL, September 10, 2020 – First Midwest Bank today announced that Angie Phillips, Senior Vice President and Commercial Underwriting Manager, was recognized as a Corporate Woman of Achievement by the National Association of Women Business Owners (NAWBO) Chicago. The NAWBO Corporate Women of Achievement are nominated by their respective firms for overcoming obstacles to climb to extraordinary heights in the company while also elevating other women.

Phillips has more than 15 years of experience in commercial banking. In her current role, she is responsible for managing more than 30 underwriting professionals and a portfolio of $4 billion in commercial loan exposure, and she successfully integrated multiple commercial portfolios from several of First Midwest Bank’s acquisitions. She also serves as a member of the board of directors for two organizations – the Young Professionals for Catholic Charities, Diocese of Joliet and the Bishop McNamara Catholic School in Bourbonnais, Illinois – and is a student at the Og Mandino Leadership Institute.

“First Midwest Bank strives to build strong leaders and role models who pave the way for future women in the banking industry,” said Mike Jamieson, Executive Vice President and Director of Commercial Banking at First Midwest. “Angie Phillips embodies innovation, diligence and leadership, and we are thrilled she is being recognized for her positive impact at our company and in the greater community.”
